FORD'S 5-DAY WEEK SPREADS TO N. Y.

Woman Employer To Try Out Plan of Shortening Hours

By JOHN COLLINS

Despite the groans of dismay from many of the more hidebound industrial captains, Henry Ford's proposal to install the five-day working week seems to be spreading. Not only does the automotive sage of Detroit insist that it will result, strangely enough, in greater production and higher wages, but the thing is actually about to be tried by others, among them Mrs. Norman de R. Whitehouse, who runs a leather business here.

The proposal is not so preposterous under the present machine system as many would like to believe. There doesn't appear to be much justification for a scheme which takes the worker and puts him in a monotonous position where his creative instincts are stifled unless the worker gets something he could not get otherwise in return. He gets more goods and more services from the machine, to be sure, but of what use are they unless he has adequate time in which to enjoy them?

Growing Liberalism

By our more liberal and far-seeing industrialists this fact has for some time been recognized. They have been visualizing their plants not as agencies toward greater dividends but as tools which may be used in approaching the perfect state where the mass of the people may live comfortably with little or no effort. They see the machine as the servant of the worker rather than the master.

The history of the machine gives ground for optimism relative to a shorter work-week. It is not so long ago that workers entered the New England textile mills, for example, before sunrise, and emerged after darkness had descended.

When the 48-hour law was proposed in Massachusetts it was considered by the mill managers a form of political insanity. A great social upheaval at Lawrence followed its enactment. This was only fourteen years ago. And now the issue is the week of forty hours!

U. S. Cotton Stocks Cut by Prosperity

Prolonged prosperity enjoyed by the masses of people in this country has drained the surplus stocks of cotton goods accumulated by the mills during the lean period after the crash of 1920, the Association of Cotton Textile Merchants of New York reports.

The mill warehouses are down now nearly to bare floors.

On November 1, stocks available for shipment amounted to less than one month's supply.

Heap Big Injun Chief Ready to Solve Crime for Fee

Extending to Senator Simpson the best wishes of the Sioux tribe, Big Chief Shearwakawaka, a grandson of the famous Sitting Bull, sent his theory of the Hall-Mills murder from Rosebud, South Dakota, today.

After assuring the prosecutor that his subjects are deeply interested in the trial, the chief offered to come East and solve the murder, provided his expenses were paid.

the incision in Mrs. Mills's abdomen and examined the organs before he made any move to identify the woman. The physician this morning asserted that Hubbard, the undertaker, asked him to examine Mrs. Mills's body for identification.)

Scratches on Arms

A. There were minor scratches on Mrs. Mills's arms and hands below her elbows.

Q. Did you attend the first autopsy on Dr. Hall? A. Yes.

Q. Who else was there? A. Dr. Schmidt, Dr. Long, Dr. Hegeman and others were there.

Q. Were there other wounds beside the bullet? A. Yes, bruises and scratches on the hands and arms, and an abrasion on the left leg.

Case, in his cross-examination, asked:

"Was Mrs. Mills's larynx missing?"

"I didn't notice; my observations were casual," said Cronk as he left the stand.

Dr. Hegeman, recalled, told Simpson he had performed the Hall autopsy four years ago.

Q. What did you observe? A. A bullet wound entering his scalp at the hair line and coming out the back of his skull.

Q. Anything else? A. Yes, abrasions on his fingers and possibly a mark on his wrist.

Dr. Hegeman was shown the notes dictated by him to Cronk at the autopsy.

Abrasions on Fingers

Q. With your memory refreshed can you tell us more? A. There was an abrasion of the right index finger, another on the little finger. On the back of the left wrist was another abrasion. On the back of the left hand, back of the little finger, was another abrasion.

Clotted blood beneath these abrasions showed the injuries had been inflicted before death.

The evidence tended to bear out the state's contention that Dr. Hall

Pleads to Save Millions In Jersey Bridge Boom

HACKENSACK, N. J., Nov. 10.—The proposed Hudson River Bridge between Manhattan and Bergen county, N. J., will mean such a tremendous increase in population on the New Jersey side that immediate steps must be taken to provide proper facilities for growth or there will be disaster.

struggled violently with his murderers before they shot him.

On the left forearm, four inches above the wrist, was another abrasion. On the right calf, five inches below the knee joint, was a perforating wound. A small abrasion was on the left hip.

Reading from his own record, Dr. Hegeman described the track of the bullet that had killed the rector.

This is the substance of a letter to the Bergen county Board of Freeholders from Nicholas J. Hill, Jr., of Hackensack, president of the Hackensack Water Company, and clearly marks the fact that Bergen county is awake to the coming boom.

Millions Wasted

"Unfortunately for the boroughs of The Bronx and Queens, they adopted no definite plan anticipating the growth that came with the last fifteen years' development. The result has been costly reconstruction," he states.

Among things which must be arranged before the bridge is completed are proper traffic facilities, sewerage systems, streets and park plans, electric light, gas and water systems.

Should Start Now

He stated that millions would be saved if the work of preparation is started now instead of later, after the flood of population pours in. By laying out the county properly now, he declares, it will be more beautiful.

The GRAPHIC, which has been active in the campaign for the Hudson River Bridge as a release for overflow population in Greater New York, also has pointed out this phase in the miraculous development which soon will materialize.

Cops Nab Society Leader As 'Rubber Check' Passer

William Barton French, society favorite and scion of a proud family, is being questioned at police headquarters this afternoon in connection with the passing of a $3,500 check, alleged to have been worthless.

He was taken from the French liner Paris down the bay by Lieut. Mayer and Detective Brown of Inspector Coughlin's staff.

Capt. Blancart of the Paris at first refused to give up his passenger. He explained he had received a wireless from the authorities at Nice, instructing him to return French to that place. It was at Nice that the check is alleged to have been given a representative of Thomas Cook & Son, tourist agents.

The local detectives, however, were able to convince the captain that French was now in America and under the jurisdiction of the New York police. French stoutly declared he was innocent of any intentional wrongdoing, although admitting he had signed the check. He explained that in the hurry of getting away he had neglected to instruct his bank to have the necessary funds ready.
